(Coming soon) RawImageAnalyser in Action: RawImageAnalyser runs with the Windows' explorer and takes two or more images to compare. Once started, it will display the chosen images side-by-side and lets you analyze the pictures one-by-one in a new window and then show a comparison window next to each image. When performing a new comparison the program lets you enter the settings: the colors of the images (white balance), the contrast level, the magnification factor and the regions of interest. After these settings are applied, you are allowed to enter the ROI name, so you can specify where you want the program to focus on. Then you should click on the 'Compare' button to start the comparison process. As soon as the two pictures are selected and the comparisons are made, the image with the most `identical` pixels will be displayed at the top, while the image with the least `

What's New in the RawImageAnalyser?

RawImageAnalyser is a software that enables you to perform extensive image comparisons using the basic tools found in most picture editing programs: zoom, rotate, crop and convert between different formats. In contrast to most image comparison tools that use simple icons to show the pixels that are being compared, RawImageAnalyser takes a visual approach, using a special panel to display image differences side by side, while letting you emphasize the differences in its third panel. RawImageAnalyser supports comparing pictures in raw format (lives in the RAW folder of your picture viewer or photo editor), JPG, PNG, TIFF, BMP and other popular image formats. A wide variety of hotkeys, as well as a few mouse-based operations, allow you to zoom and rotate images, easily crop the compared region, change between image formats, and do more. RawImageAnalyser also allows you to set a region of interest (ROI) for a more precise comparison, and to zoom in on that area for a more detailed image inspection. The program also features a histogram and can export the selected ROI, as well as the whole picture. Sometimes it's useful to extract a list of the differences between the selected images, for instance, if you'd like to use a picture in a print or brochure with a different image. This is what RawImageAnalyser can do, by zooming in on the area of interest and displaying the differences in a small text file (in a variety of image formats). RawImageAnalyser Features: Automated image matching of similar images Detects differences in RAW format Exports differences to text files Allows you to specify an ROI Supports RAW, JPG, PNG, TIFF, BMP and a few other formats Recognizes and compares images side by side Supports zooming, rotating and cropping Displays differences in a separate panel Generates list of differences to text files Supports Windows 95, 98, Me, 2000, XP, Vista, 7 and 8 RawImageAnalyser Version History: It has come a long way since I wrote the first version of RawImageAnalyser. Thanks to all of you that have downloaded the program and to all the freeware and shareware publishers that have let me keep writing and improving the app. The program is based on multiple versions of PIX, a 32-bit package that was written by Marc Delamont.
